Dr. Coleman has been confined to his room with a deep cold, cough and sore throat. He has been unable to leave his house, but he is unable to take to any other. His son, Asa, is a pediatrician, possessing by virtue of his peculiar combination, proportion and peculiarities, the ability to cure all other physicians failing to do so.

The students did exceedingly well, considering that they did not take much time to prepare their little ones.

The hall, after playing a tune or two, came into the hands of Mr. T. J. Morris, who had again, which consisted of songs, orations, declamations, etc., with a piece of music from the choir and band occasionally. The students did exceedingly well, considering that they did not take much time to prepare their little ones.

The students having finished their exercises, Prof. Wilson was called upon to speak. He spoke on a subject which was characterized by that much vigor, sound and intelligent reasoning that is to be found in all of his lectures. He was followed by Prof. Wilson, Sing! Love, and Mrs. W. V. Graves and Wm. Willigan. They said many good things, which went to prove that the changes had been made in the past few years, and material development in the school, and the school's education.

The time now being near to close, Prof. Wilson, in a few appropriate remarks, thanked the people in general for their kind and considerate attention, and responded after the singing of the closing chorus, that he would extend his hand to any student or friend of his kind before leaving, for all affections arising from pure blood or love of the system it is unequalled. So be sure to get home's.

THE TOBACCO SITUATION.

Commissioner of Agriculture Wilson Addresses Some Plain Sensible Words to Growers.

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER OF AGRICULTURE, FEB. 9.

To the State Government of Kentucky: It may be considered obtrusive on my part to make any suggestions to the farmers of Kentucky, for the reason that every man is supposed to understand his own business. Nevertheless, I would very willingly offer a few plain suggestions relating to tobacco production.

In the first place, it is proper to say that non-production is not desirable, but it is possible, for with many, especially the smaller farmers, its production is a necessity. Tobacco is a luxury, and is a necessity only in so far as we may choose to make it so. The production of tobacco is a fact. Its use has become very general, and there is little prospect of a curtailment of consumption, but, as population increases, and the demand for tobacco grows nearly all over Europe. A fair return in the incoming crop will materially help the present stock on hand, and the market price will be the increased demand, but, while the demand will be increased, a corresponding increase will always follow the area of production. To keep that demand from being supplied, it should be the chief object of the intelligent farmer, but it is difficult to wield a large element of people without organization of the class of persons interested in the matter.

In Kentucky, as in other States, there is no effective organization of producers, and when there is a surplus it must be carried from year to year with interest on money invested, storage, loss in weight, and worst of all deterioration of quality. The chief part of the crop, the tobacco, is lost at a ruinous sacrifice. It is a wild plant and can be produced in some form in almost every country. The chief merit of Kentucky tobacco is that it is superior to other tobacco growing elsewhere, as suitable for export wrappers and fillers, and for stemming purposes. But tobacco, like bonbons, changes taste, and it is well that these questions should be discussed, and the farmer, who is the consumer, should consider his own individual interest, but yield something to the general welfare of those with whom he is intimately connected.

If a farmer can sell one thousand pounds of tobacco, he should do so, but, for the most part, he will be compelled to sell so much as will be required for his own consumption, for as much as he could sell two thousand pounds with an over production, it is apparent that the former course would be better. It requires less labor, less expense, and less capital investment. The extra labor saved in this way can always be utilized in a profitable direction—in fact, a variety of crops is always best, because it requires a variety of labor, and the market will demand a variety of popular and artistic necessity. We may lose a whole year's labor, by the failure of a single crop, while, with a variety of crops, we are almost certain of some kind of return. We can raise stock, save grass, grow good grain, and butter and chickens and general drels, and many of the best old mothers are now going to market with all these goodlies, when a disease, but that almost always occurs, and it is considered almost a disgrace, but this and other diseases are the result of the folly of former times. Thus, one good trotting horse, that is not yet a horse, but only a colt, and has cost ten or fifteen dollars, will sell for more money than an ordinary even-trotter, that cost two hundred dollars to produce.

It occurs to me that the farmer of Kentucky would be best served by the encouragement of the continued excessive production of tobacco, doing them harm in several ways.

First—the excessive quantity compels low prices.

Second—Large production generally means poor quality, and tobacco can be produced in most of this country, and in nearly all the countries of Europe.

Third—Large production means deterioration of farmland lands at a wasteful rate, as the result of producing such low prices, which do not justify the sacrifice.

Fourth—The tobacco crop, largely injurious to farm lands, which is estimated that about forty percent of the tobacco chowed in this country is burley. While dark tobacco was once the monarch and an actual necessity in the tobacco trade, the burley tobacco, it has yielded the weaker to burley tobacco in our dominions. The entire export demand for tobacco raised in Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky and Tennessee amounts annually to about one hundred and twenty thousand barrels. The markets in Europe are well stocked, and it is apparent that, with continued over-production in this country, prices will not prevail for the export materials. The present system of export markets is to give out contracts for what they need for one year's supply. The contractors then go to work to find stocks and develop markets, and by a system of secrecy as to types, times of delivery and prices they can afford to pay, actually frightened of competition, and the market is monopolized. Even at best they make a speculative carry the tobacco standing loss in weight and all expenses, and they are forced to do this, and the market is driven by an indifference that is appalling, until they squeeze the life-blood out of the owner.

The Tobacco situation. Our Bureau friends need not prick up their ears, for the secret of our dark-tobacco answer. The answer will be true of them if they don't look out. The only difference is that they have the open markets and the competition of the world, while we have the market which appears upon their market face to face and meet each other in open combat, instead of slipping in at the back door and trying to catch a fellow in the dark.

The solution of the question consists in getting the shine to the rind on the other man's foot. By a curtailment of the area to a point, so as to increase the demand, and the demand, stand back on your dignity and prestige, and by growing a smaller quantity we can grow it better and relieve ourselves of the curse of over-production. The market grows nearly all over Europe. A fair return in the incoming crop will materially help the present stock on hand, and the market price will be the increased demand, but, while the demand will be increased, a corresponding increase will always follow the area of production. To keep that demand from being supplied, it should be the chief object of the intelligent farmer, but it is difficult to wield a large element of people without organization of the class of persons interested in the matter.

The Boston Journal relates a good story of a prominent legal firm in that city, which does a great deal of business for a rich mercantile concern. It is the custom of the firm to have a large number of the mercantile establishment who was accustomed to liberal charges thought was too high. He therefore, took the bill to the law firm and asked them to estimate the cost, and see if it was all right. The account was returned with $100 added for "advice as to the reasonableness of the bill."

A Serpent Among the Books.

(St. Louis Christian Advocate)

We received many with a yellow method. One day a gentleman in India went into his library and took down a book from the shelves. As he did so he felt a sharp pain in his finger, like the sting of a serpent. He thought that a serpent had been stuck in some place in the cover of the book. But soon his finger began to swell, then his arm, and then his whole body, and in a short time he died. It was not a pin smote the book, but a small and dead serpent.

There are many serpents among the books of the world, and the bite of some of our most fashionable literature; they coil around the flowers whose perfume intoxicates the senses. When the record of ruined souls is made up, what multitudes will be inserted in the serpents among the books.
